Consumer products and retail quarterly update

Consumer products and retail trends

E-commerce takes over1

While many businesses are doing their best to market products online, it has been the 100 percent web-based businesses and brands that have truly seen their demand skyrocket. In North America, the number of online orders for web-only retailers were up 52 percent YoY in the last two weeks of march. Outpacing the success of general ecommerce, US online grocery websites are seeing a 300 percent increase in web traffic YoY, resulting in valuable exposure for e-commerce grocery businesses, as is the case in other industries traditionally associated with brick-and-mortar operations.

Home improvement³

People spending 24/7 at home has led to a boom in "fixer-upper" activity, as homeowners now have limited outlets to occupy their attention besides their immediate surroundings. Atypical "essential" retailers, such as Lowe's and Home Depot, are becoming increasingly important as demand for smaller home décor products skyrockets. Home improvement retailers have also seen a boost for outdoor furniture and equipment, as consumers look to maximize and invest in their limited available outdoors space.

Apparel dresses down²

With the country forced into work from home setups and solely videoconference interactions, consumers are dressing up less and prioritizing comfort. Luxury apparel companies are doing their best to adapt, but are seeing the effects of the virus on items that would not show up in a traditional teleworking call, such as pants and shoes. Casual clothing companies are seeing additional demand for their products, including leisure and athleisure brands that now transcend the typical boundary of office and home wardrobe.

Health and wellness⁴

The COVID-19 pandemic has resulted in a renewed cautiousness about health, prompting consumers to incorporate healthy tendencies to many areas of their lifestyles. From food and beverage choices to wellness supplements, more consumers are taking care of their bodies to help fight infection and stay healthy during this period of time. While sanitation products and medical supplies held the initial clamor of consumers' shopping carts, many consumers are taking on long-term changes as they look toward maintaining health post-pandemic.

In the news

March 11, 2020 – PepsiCo, Inc., NASDAQ:PEP (Pepsi), an American multinational food, snack, and beverage corporation, announced it has entered into a definitive agreement to acquire Rockstar Energy drinks, a move that puts the food and beverage giant in position to compete with its rivals head-on for dominance in the rapidly growing energy set. Within Pepsi's current product portfolio, Rockstar joins a limited range of energy beverages housed under the Mountain Dew Brands. MTN DEW AMO offers four flavors in 16 oz. cans, while MTN DEW Kickstart is a caffeine-added blend of juice and Mountain Dew. Pepsi also distributes coffee energy products through its partnership with Starbucks Coffee.⁵

January 23, 2020 – Keurig Dr. Pepper Inc. (NYSE: KDP), a large
US-based beverage manufacturing company, acquired Limitless Coffee, a Chicago-based caffeinated sparkling water brand. The deal is part of the larger trend of beverage giants looking to bring on sparkling water brands in order to fill the void created by slowing soda sales. The addition of Limitless continues the expansion of KDP's already strong water portfolio, which includes CORE Hydration, Bai, and evian, but also looks to capture the growth from an increase in caffeine consumption nationwide.⁶
